Please note that M2 typically gets busy on Friday and Saturday at midnight which is when the kitchen closes, it is not typical for a restaurant to have peak attendance far after typical dinner hours and at the time the kitchen closes. Typically, if a kitchen closes at midnight, the last call for orders would be in advance of the kitchen closing so that there is time to prepare food. It is odd that attendance would peak at a time when orders are likely not taken considering prep time for food. If Friday and Saturday nights when the kitchen is closing are their busiest times it would indicate that their primary use is not reflective as a restaurant. Can you explain how it was determined that a restaurant was their primary use when they are least populated during their Sunday brunch time? Additionally, Please confirm field visits and investigations were conducted after midnight. If not, we are concerned that findings before midnight might be an accurate example of their operations.
